Security Threat Groups in Jails

POST #21169

Security threat groups (STGs) are broadly defined as "any group that presents a risk to the security of the institution or personnel". They are detrimental to the best interests of the inmates because they work in opposition to the orderly function and operation of the institution. This class will provide staff with a better understanding of identifying, classifying, and managing the individuals in STGs. It will focus on developing the participant's level of knowledge of gangs as well as current activities, trends and reduction strategies, and it will examine gang intelligence, correctional intelligence protocols, security threats, unit development and operational management. In addition to looking at street gang evolution, gang crime, and gang identification, the class will also address communications, typology, personal safety, and the psychological and sociological impact gangs have on society as well as officer and public safety

TAKEAWAYS – Participants walk away with:

A bettering understanding of STGs;
The ability to recognize signs of STG activity in a facility;
Insight into STG mentality; and
An appreciate for the importance of properly classifying members of STGs.

TOPICS INCLUDE

The Make-Up of STGs
Recruitment
Locations
Initiation
Managing STGs Sources of Intelligence
